

Hello, I'm Victoria and I'm from Suriname. My question is, do you think _____ (poor / pour) people are happier _____ (then / than) rich people?

I believe this is a very difficult question to _____ (answer / answers) because the question contains some _____ (generalization / generalizations). Poor people, and rich people are _____ (lumped / bumped) together here, and they are compared as a group, _____ (that / which) I think is not entirely _____ (accuracy / accurate) because you have different types of poor people. You have poor people _____ (where / that) are content with what they have or don't have, and when you are content, it _____ (contributes / contribution) to your happiness.

_____ (Where / Whereas) there are poor people that are not happy with _____ (their / they're) circumstances, understandably so, because let's take for _____ (example / samples), people who live in famine-stricken areas or areas with _____ (natural / naturally) disasters that have robbed them of everything they have, their homes, their _____ (lively / livelihood), their security, healthcare. I mean, it is _____ (understandable / understanding) that people become _____ (unhappy / unhappily) if they have to suffer.

On the other hand, you have rich people. I think _____ (there / they) are a number of types of rich people. You have rich people _____ (when / that) are never satisfied, keep chasing more and more and more, and those people tend to be _____ (unhappiness / unhappy). Whereas there might be rich people who have _____ (purpose / purposely) and are content with what they have, which _____ (contributes / contribute) to their happiness. So, I think it really _____ (depends / depending) on what type of poor people are being _____ (compare / compared) to what type of rich people.
