

Hi, my name is Billie and I am _____ (current / currently) living in South Africa. And my question today is, should people _____ (taking / take) law into their own _____ (hand / hands)?

Simple answer, no. The _____ (reason / reasons) I say this is because we come from such _____ (difference / different) backgrounds culturally, and also just family _____ (life / live) and certain _____ (morals / morale) and upbringing is a whole lot different from one culture to _____ (other / another), even in the same country. So, I think if _____ (everyone / everywhere) was just to decide as to what law would _____ (fit / fat) best a circumstance, it would make the world a lot more _____ (chaos / chaotic) because what I feel is just and _____ (fare / fair), somebody from a _____ (different / differently) culture or somebody even just next door to me might _____ (feel / felt) that that was not fair and it could have been _____ (handled / handles) differently. So, I think the _____ (law / low) is there to make sure that everyone does get _____ (treatment / treated) equally, although sometimes that _____ (equality / equal) slips through the _____ (cracks / crack), but I think that they are _____ (trying / try) their best.

Anyways, that's just my _____ (opinion / opinionated). What about you? What do you think? Should people _____ (took / take) the law into their own hands? Let me _____ (know / knew).
